Dear Ms. Smith,

This is Jennifer Roy. I'm writing to ask about a class my friends and I signed up for at your art center a month ago. We've already paid half for the class.

The problem is that one of my friends won't be able to make it for the class, so there'll be only nine of us. I understand that all classes at Sugarflower® need to have at least ten students, but we'd like to keep the class. So, what can we do here? Do you think it's possible to open up our class to other people who are interested in signing up? Maybe there'll still be enough students to open the class.

Hope to hear from you soon.

Jennifer Roy

Goodpanda, a food delivery company, yesterday announced a plan to expand its services to more cities. The company operates in 11 cities in Taiwan, and is to add more by the end of the year. Besides using motorcycles, it would also be able to use bicycles, or walk to deliver food. The company said that it is the largest online restaurant delivery service company in the nation. Like Uder Eats, Goodpanda lists its restaurant partners on an app, through which consumers can order food for delivery by the company's drivers.

As of the end of last month, the number of the company's restaurant partners had doubled from the same time a year earlier, and it plans to partner with more restaurants throughout the rest of the year, Goodpanda said. The company yesterday also released a new service that allows consumers to order food on its app and pick it up at the restaurants themselves to save on delivery costs. In addition, Goodpanda plans to extend its service hours to 2am from 1:30am.
