Billy was happy because he bought the first house in his life. But the house was not in a good condition. The paint fell off, and the windows were broken. He didn't have any money to renovate the house. What could he do?

He came up with an idea. He started the blog "Need Your Help—A Man with a Dilapidated House." He posted the pictures of the walls and windows of his house on the blog. Also, he wrote something to ask people in his community if they could help. Many people in his community read the blog and responded. Some of them shared their stories of renovating an old house. Some of them said they were ready to help.

On the morning of the first weekend, some men and women went to Billy's house. In their hands were paint, paintbrushes, and food. They came to help Billy because he was their neighbor. Finally, Billy had a nice and comfortable house to live in. He was a lucky man with those good neighbors around.

Many people in the world celebrate Christmas and Christmas Eve. In fact, the day "after" Christmas is also a special day in many countries. People call it "Boxing Day." It started in Great Britain and spread to Canada, Australia, and South Africa. In most of these places, it's also an official holiday.

The origin of the holiday's name is not clear, but everyone agrees that it has nothing to do with the fighting sport "boxing." And how do people celebrate Boxing Day? People may relax with their family and friends or join some fun activities. In some countries, they even take advantage of the after-Christmas sales starting on Boxing Day.

December 26 may just be an ordinary day for some people. For other people, however, it's Boxing Day—a day of relaxing, shopping, and doing fun activities.
